

Greetings Club Member

Today, I'm thrilled to invite you to the ultimate Cold War countdown.

My brand-new thriller, Beneath A Bloodied Sun, is officially live.

This story has been a true labour of love, taking me from the archives of 1970s nuclear history to some incredible research destinations. I cannot wait for you to dive in.

The Fuse Is Lit...

It's the 1970s. The South African government is playing by the world's nuclear rule book... until they discover a hostile neighbour concealing a ballistic missile. Then, the gloves come off.

Facing deepening international sanctions and total isolation, Washington demands answers. Enter CIA operative Regan Coleman (who you can see on the cover: gorgeous, cool and lethal). Her mission? Infiltrate a fortress.

She targets Letterman McGavell.

Known as "the fixer," McGavell is embedded deep inside South Africa's nuclear establishment. But he has problems of his own. With a spy on his doorstep and snooping satellites overhead, he's already outgunned and overstretched.

Then, a rogue nuclear detonation sends the world spiraling.

In a deadly race against time, McGavell is forced to make a choice: does he cross the line and collaborate with the CIA? After all, the only other person he can rely on is the one he trusts the least – his own flesh and blood.

Why You'll Want to Read This:

- The Scale: This journey takes you from the searing heat of the Kalahari Desert to the ice-clogged Arctic Circle and from sun-dappled trout streams to the rattling heartbeat of the Moscow underground.
- The Era: It's a classic tale of espionage, conspiracy and betrayal African style. If you're a fan of Tom Clancy, Tony Maxwell, or Wilbur Smith, this one is for you.
